Background

In a world transformed by accelerating technological change, globalization, climate disruption, and shifting social dynamics – and in a context of tightening financial constraints – education itself is undergoing profound transformation. Learning today spans the entire life course and takes place across different settings, from early childhood to adult upskilling across formal, non-formal and informal environments. While the central principles of the right to education remain firm, stakeholders are increasingly called upon to review human rights normative frameworks to respond to these new and complex realities.

Against this backdrop, UNESCO and the University of Geneva, with the valuable contributions of experts, are launching two complementary Special Issues that emerged from the discussions at the 2024 Geneva Human Rights Dialogue. These will be published respectively by Frontiers in Education Journal (focusing on Anglophone experts) and L'éducation en débats Journal (engaging Francophone experts). Each Special Issue tackles some of the most pressing questions, exploring the evolving dimensions of the right to education, its normative foundations, and its relevance in an increasingly complex and changing world.

Held in the framework of the 2025 UN Human Rights Council Social Forum, this interactive roundtable discussion will showcase key contributions from leading thinkers and foster an open discussion with participants. The roundtable will reflect on persistent and emerging challenges – from the commodification of education to the ethical dilemmas of AI and education in crisis contexts – and consider key policy innovations necessary to enforce the right to education for all, as a lever for the protection and fulfilment of all human rights for everyone, everywhere.

Aim, objectives and expected outcomes

Framed around the launch of these new Special Issues, the aim is to take stock of lessons learned and catalyze inclusive, multi-stakeholder dialogue on the evolving right to education in response to both persistent and emerging challenges.

Specific objectives

- Deepen understanding of how structural inequalities and global transformations shape the implementation of the right to education.
- Foster exchange and collaboration among experts, Member States, civil society, academia, private sector and other key actors on the future of the right to education.
- Share insights from experts about key challenges and forward-looking strategies to safeguard and advance education as a fundamental human right.

Expected outcomes

- Strengthened networks between academic contributors, human rights actors, and education stakeholders.
- Inform UNESCO's Evolving Right to Education Initiative.
- Greater visibility of the Special Issues and 2024 Geneva Human Rights Dialogue key findings.
- Inputs for follow-up research and advocacy at the Human Rights Council and beyond.
